You just bought a new HP printer, excited to save money on ink with a compatible cartridge. You install it, close the door, and bam — "Cartridge Rejected." Your HP+ printer with non-genuine cartridge is now a paperweight. The frustration is real, and you're not alone. Thousands of users face this exact HP printer – "cartridge rejected" – HP+ printer with non-genuine nightmare every single day.

What Is This "Cartridge Rejected" Error?

The "cartridge rejected" error appears when your HP+ printer detects that you're using a non-genuine or refilled cartridge. HP+ is a program that permanently locks your printer to original HP cartridges only. Once activated — often during setup through the HP Smart App without clear warning — there's no way to disable it.

Here's the brutal truth: HP+ printers use Dynamic Security firmware that continuously checks each cartridge's chip ID, ink levels, and authenticity through HP's servers. Even if you refill a genuine HP cartridge, the printer can detect it's been reused and reject it. This is why your HP+ printer with non-genuine cartridge keeps showing that dreaded "cartridge rejected" message.

Why Does HP Do This?

HP sells HP+ printers at lower prices, offering longer warranties and free ink to attract buyers. But here's the catch — you're locked into buying expensive genuine HP cartridges forever. Many customers unknowingly activate HP+ during setup and only discover the limitation when their compatible cartridge gets rejected. HP's official stance? Replace all non-HP cartridges with genuine HP cartridges. They offer no workaround for HP+ printers.

The Official "Solutions" That Don't Work

HP support will tell you to:

- Buy genuine HP cartridges (expensive!)
- Contact HP support (they'll just sell you more ink)
- Reset your printer (temporary at best)

But let's be honest — if you're reading this, you already know these aren't real solutions. For an HP+ printer with non-genuine cartridges, the official answer is always the same: spend more money.
